How Barron's Ranks the Fund Families

All mutual and exchange-traded funds are required to report their returns (to regulators, as well as in advertising and marketing material) after fees are deducted, to better reflect what investors would actually receive. But our aim is to measure managers' skill, independent of expenses beyond annual management fees. That's a large part of why we calculate returns before any 12b-1 fees are deducted. Similarly, loads, or sales charges, aren't included in our calculation of returns. The other reason? The multitude of share classes makes it nearly impossible to ascertain what a typical investor would pay in terms of annual expenses or loads.

Each fund's performance is measured against all of the other funds in its Lipper category, with a percentile ranking of 100 being the highest and one the lowest. The result is then weighted by asset size, relative to the fund family's other assets in its general classification. If a family's biggest funds do well, that boosts its overall showing; poor performance in its biggest funds hurts a firm's ranking. To be included in our survey, a firm must have at least three funds in the general equity category, one world equity, one mixed asset (such as a balanced or target-date fund), two taxable bonds, and one national tax-exempt bond fund.

We have historically excluded single-sector and single-country stock funds, but those are now included, as part of the general equity category. We exclude all index funds, including pure index, enhanced index, and index-based. But we include actively managed exchange-traded funds and ETFs with indexing strategies that are not the traditional capitalization-weighted or equal-weighted.

Finally, the score is multiplied by the weighting of its general classification, as determined by the entire Lipper universe of funds. The category weightings for the one-year results in 2017 were general equity, 36.1%; mixed asset, 19.9%; world equity, 18.7%; taxable bond, 21.2%; and tax-exempt bond, 4%,

The scoring: Say a fund in the general U.S. equity category has $500 million in assets, accounting for half of a firm's assets in that category, and its performance lands it in the 75th percentile for the category. The first calculation would be 75 times 0.5, which comes to 37.5. That score is then multiplied by 36.1%, general equity's overall weighting in Lipper's universe. So it would be 37.5 times 0.361, which equals 13.54. Similar calculations are done for each fund in our study. Then the numbers are added for each category and overall. The shop with the highest total score wins. The same process is repeated to determine five- and 10-year rankings.
